English language Nowadays, more than 300,000,000 people speak English. People speak English as their first or native language, in countries such as the United Kingdom, the United States, Australia or New Zealand. In other countries like Pakistan, India, Guyana or South Africa, English is not the mother tongue, but people speak it as a second language. In Canada, they have two official languages, English and French. Since the beginning of the XX century, English has become the main language of international communication. Although Mandarin Chinese and Spanish both have more native speakers, English is certainly the world's most popular language in the world. English is today an 'open' language. It has incorporated words from Latin, Greek, and many modern languages. For example, many words derive from Hindi, such as pajamas and bungalow. In Latin American and European countries, English is a very important foreign language and people usually learn it at school.	The importance of English has grown since the World Wars of the last century. The cinema, music, and television have helped take American culture into many countries that listen to American music and watch American films, sit-coms, and cartoons. There are, of course, various small differences between the English that people use in different parts of the world. There are also numerous different accents, none of which is 'better' than the others. The most common differences in English are between American and British English, but in Australia, Scotland, and Ireland there are also differences in vocabulary. For a long time, people around the world have considered English as the world's most important language. Has this process finished? Only time will answer this question.
